Here's How a Few Optical Industry Colleagues Are Spending Their Summer Vacation

Today's Read As of about midday yesterday (June 21), we officially began the summer season of 2019. So, basically, what this means is that if you haven't already scheduled an amazing summer adventure, then you've missed out on the best beach rentals, the hot summer shows and much of the off-peak visiting times for just about every national park. But it seems the majority of Americans are very good at planning ahead when it comes to summer travel. According to AAA, about four in 10 U.S. adults (or 100 million Americans) are expecting to take a family trip. This is slightly more than last year, and why wouldn't it be since the economy is still humming along and unemployment is at or near record lows. The website Bankrate.com is expecting even a higher percentage of Americans to hit the road for vacation and travel this summer. Its survey during the spring indicated that of 2,577 adults, 52 percent are vacationing this summer.
